

Public Review When Law Mandates Accountability Against Federal Judges

The evidence received by the “Public Corruption” criminal division against the federal judges of California exist as evidence of concealment of violations identified by the court under its statutory requirements found of “clear and convincing evidence.” After appointing attorney Phillip Trevino, the third step to be taken upon a finding of “clear and convincing evidence” of a violation of the constitutional laws of the United States.

The court prevented the further law requirements to resolve the violations of the constitution upon the same facts that define “clear and convincing evidence” when evidence of intentional misconduct by the state court officials become known.

The court concealed the same violations that established evidence of this violation including the finding required, that no reasonable or rational jury would have found the petitioner guilty, under the same met requirements of “clear and convincing evidence.” The only evidence that establishes that no reasonable or rational jury would have found the petitioner guilty exists as an instruction under the definition of law. That no such person alleged to be a second getaway driver can be a participant of robbery under the creation of who is a getaway driver as a participant of robbery.

This evidence with several procedures taken by the same court to resolve the found violation exist as evidence of public corruption located on the public record of case No. 5:09-00310-VAP (cw). These violations have been separately reported as Public Corruption to the Judicial Watch, Congress Watch, FBI, Separate Government Accountability Offices as experts to identify the concealing of violations by act of fraud.

The courts own findings that establish clear and convincing evidence must exist as found true upon the actions of the court to resolve the violations.
